SPARROW

Sound & Picture Archives for Research on Women

This year has not been particularly easy. But we carry the weight of so many years of struggle that we took this year also in our stride. At the end of March the Director with a swollen ankle was still walking with her usual speed and the SPARROW team decided that there was going to be no limping around. Plans have been made to face the future with a brave heart as usual. Sparrows are resilient birds; they never give up building nests and laying eggs and flying about. The blue sky above always seems to buoy their spirits and they never fail to fly higher and higher. They have no fear of flying or of falling.
